

Light/ Time Theory

1. First of all light is a constant. Time however is not. Time is relative to its nature. Beginning to end, time will exist and then super naturally, eternity, which is constant of time. A day is like a thousand years to the Father.(2 Pet.3:8) The definition of time is the indefinite continued progress of existence and events in the past present and future regarded as a whole. All things move through time. The definition of motion is the action or process of moving or being moved. Time is formed with a set principle of laws like gravity and centrifugal force which help to force it be. In theory time may be relative to the motion it is controlled by. In other words you speed the clock by moving the gears faster. The Alpha and the Omega is one of the names of God or otherwise known as the Beginning and the End, Light and energy from nothing and then into nothing light and energy. This is a constant. All things will be made new, even a new earth and laws of physics for we will be in an eternal state. It will happen over and over again and again throughout the universe, forever as each god will be given a world. Our world was Adam's. It is said in scripture: In my Father's house are many mansions.(John 14:2) Each sun was an angel or messenger and each planet orbiting each star will have its own creation story. This expanse of the stars is known as the third heaven. The relative nature of time is its flux from this I Am. Flowing through from first to last it will complete its purpose through love which is unchangeable. Time's natural laws of physics mostly do not change in this life. In other words the gears of the clock remain the same. The light of the sun gives energy and by this energy the clock "ticks" and the gears are the patterns of the planets and nature around us. When a suns clock dies each surrounding planet would either be sucked into orbit pulled back into an alternate star orbit or become a float in space until it found a gravity pull to orbit with. The movement of that planet is based on the amount of momentum given by its neighboring gravitational forces. The origin of angular momentum is unknown although it may be a black hole, which is similar to a point placed in space which has no depth because of the absence of matter. This creating force may be the cause of our known galaxy, in theory it could be that if light speed is relative to its application in mass, that each amount of mass is attributed its relative allotment of motion based on light given and decrease in mass occurs when less light is administered Rather the amount of light speed exposed is equal to the ratio of mass/energy squared. This is the basis for my experiment using water. I will be attempting to prove that mass/energy squared is relative to the amount of light exposed to it, rather when there is more light or it is closer to a light source there is a greater active mass. If in the dark the water displays a less active nature than in the light im purposing light speeds relative nature. I will be doing further research in the future. In relation to absolute zero in theory the pull of motion stops and if it can be taken below absolute zero the motion goes backwards, literally energy reversing like friction energy, cold to hot. When light is applied to a temperature it would cause it to move forward again in an atom.. All zero degree experiments are done in darkness and void of light, For example the snow falls down on a cloudy day and remains, we know already that the molecules in the snow move very slowly, but when the sun hits it these molecules they move quicker causing the snow to melt into water, where the molecules move at a faster rate, thus the relativity of light speed in motion. The residual light remaining is the equal amount to the mass/energy squared. This dissipating light remains for as long as the object holds its mass and light is applied. For example a plant under a light, when the light turns off the plant dies and eventually returns to the dirt. Some objects take much longer for time to happen. But the absence of light is the non-existence of matter. Internal darkness can still hold form through outer light affect through heat but once light is removed the objects lack of force of the heat will soon cause the object to decay because of its lost of energy. This same energy exists in the cold but still the object must have light to remain matter cold or hot. Hope is the definition of spiritual mater that holds the body together. Perpetual motion exists in its form of effect through dissipating matter becoming nothing and then the counter effect through residual light effects force making the matter go away and causing the matter to come back through reverse force via blackholes becoming an opposite to create matter thus the birthing and dying of stars. This creates a full circle in the universe completing the clock of time. Also in effect of the theory of everything ,time, light, matter, space, the universe, etc. it all equates to the value of x( equaling the I Am) and A being the value of the alpha and then (if) Z being the omega to all things relative. This is the theory and mathematical basis of everything in equation. Serving as a solve for their beginning and their end their creation and destruction and purpose.

(A) $X+E+Mc/Z-E = \text{Infinity}$

The Dimension Theory:

- 1 dimension is a point
- 2 dimensions is a line
- 3 dimensions is a square
- 4 dimensions is the creation of the square
- 5 dimensions is the space of a square
- 6 dimensions moving through the beginning of the square
- 7 dimensions moving through the end of the square
- 8 dimensions is the infinite distance between the points of a square
- 9 dimensions is the whole completeness of the square
- 10 dimensions is full altering of the square
